Miss Ida R. Ferguson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John H. Ferguson, was married to Mr. Benjamin F. Oden, of Appomattox, Va., yesterday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock at Esther Memorial P. E. Church, Congress Heights. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. G. Davenport, pastor of the church, and

Draped Costume of Taffeta in Old Blue.

The bouffant effect at the hips that Fashion demands in afternoon and evening gowns is achieved these days by drapery manipulated in an artistic manner. There can be no doubt about the charm of a well-draped frock of silk or voile, particularly on a youthful wearer, and here is shown a model in old blue taffeta. The tiny buttons down the back of the waist are details worth noting, and so, too, the touch of black introduced by the satin ribbon loops on the lace collar.

was attended only by the immediate relatives of the young couple.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by Mr. Archibald Oden, Jr., was best man for his brother.

Immediately after the ceremony, Mr. Oden and his bride left for a wedding trip in the South, and upon their return, will make their home in Washington. Mr. Oden is clerk of the Committee on Foreign Relations of the House of Representatives.

The Grenfell Association has cards out for a lecture by Dr. Rosalie Slagter Morton, of New York City, on her visit to the hospitals on the Labrador, under the Grenfell Mission, last season. The purpose will be in the small ball room of the New Willard, at 4:45, Saturday afternoon, April 29, and will be illustrated with interesting new stereoscopic pictures.

The reading of a message from Dr. Grenfell, who has just returned from the war front in France, will be an interesting feature of the occasion.

The district branches of the Congressional Union will give the third of a series of card parties on the evening of May 3 at Cameron House, the national headquarters on Lafayette Square. The parties are given for the purpose of raising funds for the promotion of the Federal amendment work. The committee in charge of arrangements is composed of Miss Estelle Hellman, Mrs. Nina E. Allen, Mrs. Ruth Thurston, Mrs. M. B. Knapp, Miss B. E. Brown, Mrs. Helen Creney, and Mrs. John Kerfoot Haywood.

HOROSCOPE.

"The stars incline, but do not compel"

Friday April 28, 1916.

This is read as an average day by astrologers, who find Mercury in strongly beneficent aspect with Jupiter and Mercury friendly, while Venus is adverse with the Sun in evil place.

It is held as a peculiarly unfavorable rule for women, especially those who are employed by men in high place.

Love affairs are subject to an unlucky way. Romances between persons widely separated by age or material conditions will be numerous and many of these will lead to tragedy or unhappiness.

The sway is promising for those who sign contracts or leases, unless young women be concerned. They should define definite action. If persons wielding power or influence are involved, Accidents should be particularly cautious.

There is an auspicious sign for inventors and scientists, who seek to decrease the cost of staple articles of commerce. Chemists are believed to be subject to a most beneficent influence.

Lumber dealers have the forecast of an extraordinary condition that will bring them great gain.

Farmers should pay unusual attention to crops and to the breeding of stock, for the seeds declare that the demand for food will be more urgent than even the most far-seeing persons have imagined.

Under this planetary government nervous diseases are supposed to increase and multiply. Neuritis, rheumatism and gout will be prevalent.

Scandals probably will increase everywhere, as a sign that the end of license and self-indulgence is near, for a period of spiritual uplift is approaching.

PINEAPPLE FOR HEALTH.

A physician has made the statement that if pineapple juice could become the national beverage, we should be the healthiest people in the world. Pineapple, it seems, aids digestion and has also a wonderful effect on the throat. Moreover, and this is the reason that makes pineapple as popular as it is, pineapple is delicious. Now that such good canned pineapple can be had for a small price, our pineapple possibilities have been almost doubled.

Because of its helpful digestive properties, pineapple should not be taken unless there is food in the system to digest. Therefore, it is not a food breakfast fruit, for breakfast fruit is usually eaten at the beginning of the meal. For dessert it is admirable.

Pineapple omelet is a delicious dessert—one of those, like all other omelets, as well as souffles, that must be eaten the moment it is done. To make it, melt two tablespoonsful of butter in a skillet, and add the same amount of flour. Don't let it brown, but when it bubbles, add a cupful of shredded pineapple, slightly sweetened, and then pour in five egg yolks, beaten creamy with a pinch of salt. Then fold in the whites of five eggs, beaten stiff, and cook for two minutes on a low heat. Then put in a dash of lemon juice, and serve.

Turn out on a hot dish and serve with powdered sugar.

Pineapple shortcake is as good as strawberry shortcake, if you like pineapple. To make it, bake layers of good cake, and put them together with sweetened shredded pineapple between and on top. Pipe with whipped cream and serve with some of the pineapple juice passed in a little pitcher.

A cooling dessert for warm days is pineapple sherbet. To make it, soak a tablespoonful of gelatin in cold water, enough to cover, for two hours. Squeeze the water out, and add two cupfuls of sugar. At the end of two hours, pour a cupful of boiling water over the gelatin, and mix with the pineapple. Add a cupful of cold water, pour into a freezer and freeze.

Pineapple can be preserved without cooking in this way: Grate the pineapple and allow a pound of sugar for every pound of pineapple. Let the sugar and pineapple stand together for twelve hours, covered, in the refrigerator. Sterilize glass fruit jars by boiling them, and put the pineapple into them. Seal with sterilized tops, and keep in a cool place. This pineapple is delicious, being much like the fresh sort.

YOUR WEDDING DAY

And the Famous Men and Women Who Have Shared it.

By MARY MARSHALL

April 28—John Winthrop and Margaret Tyndel.

Happy indeed were the two whose names stand out on the matrimonial calendar for April 28, and a fitting example to all others who share the day. For John Winthrop and his wife Margaret Tyndel drank deeply of the joys of married content and happiness.

—enjoying all the more keenly the blessings that came to them because of the many privations they went through at the outset.

Still hardly a day one predicted much happiness when John went a wooing Margaret, for John bore himself mournfully for the loss of first one and then a second wife. And Margaret was considered quite a hopeless old maid, John was thirty-two with four little motherless children to be cared for, and Margaret was twenty-seven!

The first love letter to Margaret came from John, but from John's father. "I am I assure you, gentle companion of my pilgrims, a generous and hopeful supply of my greatest losses."

Perhaps the bride of today would not take as well as did Margaret this allusion to the wives who had preceded her.

When John Winthrop was married he took his wife to his father's home in Essex county, England, and it was not long after that when, goaded on

Aunt Chatty's Mothers' Club

Conducted by Mrs. Charity Brush

THE GIRL WHO ROUGES.

THIS is a real Mothers' Club, for the benefit of mothers everywhere who are struggling with questions of discipline, training, education, clothing, for the children. Write to Aunt Chatty of problems which are vexing you, and she will advise and help you to a solution of them. Write to her, too, of your own discoveries, of methods you have found successful in smoothing the rough paths of life for the tender, childish feet, that through the Mothers' Club your experience may be of benefit to other mothers who are still tangled in the web of perplexity you have so happily unraveled.

Co-operation is the secret of success in any business; so why not in the business of motherhood, that highest and holiest calling which always has been and always will be woman's crown of glory, no matter what other avenues of usefulness may be opened to her? Address Mrs. Charity Brush, care of this paper.

If the girl who paints her face could hear the comments of the men who pass her in the street I think she would never again be guilty of this repulsive practice. I have lately talked with several men who have asked me why it is that so many young girls use paint and powder so boldly and so shamelessly nowadays.

"I see nothing beautiful in it," one of them said the other day. "On the contrary, if girls but knew it, they would all the charm their youth and freshness give them by this disgusting fashion. It is hard to tell some of them from the women of the streets, so thickly are the white and red laid on. If you have any influence with girls, Aunt Chatty, I wish you would say a word against the rouge habit."

I have written of this fashion before, but I fear I did not make many converts. The hold of fashion is too firm to be loosened by a word or two even from authorities more potent than I can ever hope to be. I cannot even hope that the girls who are the worst offenders will even read this talk, which is the Mothers' Club, but if some of their mothers will, and then try to persuade their daughters of the awful consequences that follow upon the continued use of cosmetics, perhaps the "word in season" will have been said.

It is not of much use to appeal to the girls on the score of their health. Who ever heard of a healthy young animal of a girl who believed her could ever do anything but ruin her present perfect physical condition? Mothers who have tried to make their girls take care of themselves know that full well! But if we can convince our daughters that the rouge habit is the beginning of the end of their beauty perhaps we can make them take thought. They may be persuaded by sheer vanity to give up a practice that ruins them both in health and in looks.

Not long ago I was reading an article in a medical journal that made me wish I could send a copy of the paper to every woman and girl in the world who paints her face. The writer, a well-known physician, had this to say of the habit of putting rouge on the face:

"The skin of the habitual user of cosmetics, when it is possible to get a glimpse of it at all, is dry, hard and coarse. Its natural lines are deepened by the precipitation into them of the solid constituents employed. From prolonged abuse of its delicate fabric it takes on the repulsive aspect of precocious degeneration, so that at times when a woman's comeliness should be in full luxuriance, the bloom and rapture of youth give way to the seamed and haggard mask of menacing senility."

"The skin which has been put to such unnatural uses has been made a mere parchment backing for the decorator's brush. It has long been deprived of its privilege of basking in the sunlight and feeling the revivifying influences of the heaven-born breezes, but has been loaded with cloying, clogging, clammy masses until the vitality has been squeezed out of it."

Isn't that a warning, girls, that should make you think seriously about what you are doing, about what is in store for you, if you keep on putting rouge on the now soft and delicate skin of your young cheeks?

And then the shamelessness with by the religious prejudices of the day. John Winthrop left England to come to this country as organizer and governor of Salem colony in the new world. Soon after, Margaret joined her husband and in the new world she was his supporter and comforter as she had been before.

For thirty years they lived in rare happiness, the tenderness of their affection being shown in the rare old correspondence between them preserved so jealously in the Winthrop family.

which the girl of today puts on her rouge and her powder? I was sitting in a street car not long ago with a man whom I know—a man whose position in the world makes his opinion of value to a great number of people—and he called my attention to a young girl in the seat opposite ours. She was holding the small glass from her hand bag up before her eyes with one hand and with the other she was quite openly applying dabs of rouge to her cheeks.

"I have been noticing the numbers of women who openly and brazenly paint and powder their faces in the street cars," my companion said, with an air of disgust. "Even women who are old enough to know better do it nowadays, in utter disregard of the people about them. I believe a woman who is so shameless as that would have no scruples in making any other part of her toilet in public. I could never care enough about a woman I saw powdering her nose in public to want to marry her!"

Answers to Correspondents

Mrs. Sylvanus D. writes: "Have you any books on spelling you can send me? We think what you said about a good thing, and I am going to take it up."

Spelling books can be bought at all the stores where school books are sold. The bookseller can recommend a good one.

Mrs. Johann M. writes: "I read what you said about the red and gold thread and I am trying it. Do you think it could be used for lessons, too? My children are very lazy about studying their lessons for school, and I wish to find some way to make them interested."

Very young children cannot understand the need of doing things just because they ought to do them. For these children a concrete scheme like that of the stars helps wonderfully, but I should think children old enough to go to school should be taught to get their lessons because it is right. Point out to them their great privilege in getting an education and tell them it is a moral duty to show their appreciation by being good students.
